Summary

Professionally, I've enjoyed six years working with at-scale digital publishing brands. Currently, I work on contracts and freelance projects. At my various professional roles I've worked as either a designer, a frontend or a mix of the two. Having a background covering fine arts, print design, plus years pursuing optimal frontend methods while happily stumbling through rails apps has given me an interestingly rounded skill set, spanning visual design and front end development.

Employment

FREELANCE Baltimore, MD
Visual & Front End Dev
2013-present

The bulk of my freelance work has been responsive frontend development. In addition, I'm frequently responsible for visual design as well, quickly acclimating with teams or doing the build out by myself.

VOX MEDIA Washington DC
Lead Designer
2010-2013

At Vox I had the pleasure of working on an incredibly talented product team. Being with Vox through a period of rapid growth provided a rich educational experience, that I appreciate greatly. I worked primarily as a visual and UI designer, within a rails environment. I was responsible for communication with developers, designers, frontend devs, product owners, advertising etc.

AOL Dulles, VA
Designer
2009-2010

At Aol, I primarily designed for fanhouse.com, which was a top five editorially driven sports news site. However, with significant readership and a strong product team. I also helped design mmafighting.com, which ironically Vox Media wound up acquiring from Aol, while I was at Vox.

AOL Dulles, VA
Design Intern
2007-2009

This was my first professional web experience. I was responsible for working with a team, taking creative direction, working towards product launches against tricky deadlines. During my internship I became accustomed with a professional design atmosphere and also learned a great deal from some gifted designers.
